occupant protection in far side crashes - virginia tech - previous far side research undertaken in australia (fildes, sparke, et al 2002) identified a number of strengths and weaknesses with existing side impact test dummies for far side occupant protection. they concluded there was scope for improving dummy design in far side crash testing, and that a comprehensive research program into far side near-side vs. far-side stops - docsb.purdue - side is 50 feet, while at the far-side 60 feet is required. there can be no hard and fast rule governing location of bus stops; we will continue to have near-side, far-side, and mid-block stops.

vehicle and occupant motion in far-side impacts - vehicle and occupant motion in far-side impacts height - 2 sled tests that compared the kinematics of dummies and cadavers were conducted by the medical college of wisconsin [pintar 2006, 2007]. a conclusion of this research was: the thor and world side dummies demonstrate adequate biofidelity to develop countermeasures.

vehicle far-side impact crashes - research & data - that far-side occupants as illustrated in figure 1, are still subject to a risk of injury. the study by fildes et al noted that around 40 percent of restrained side impact crash casualties were far-side occupants. relatively little research literature is available that addresses protection of far-side occupants.
